

Abbreviated 3 Sessions General Description and CE Information

The Seminar In Field Instruction (SIFI) Course – Abbreviated Version equips field instruction supervisors to support students in the context of Columbia School of Social Work (CSSW)'s policies, procedures, requirements, and expectations for field supervision. Participants of the course have supervised MSW students in the past and may have taken a field instruction course at a different social work institution. However, ALL participants are new to supervising a CSSW student.

Therefore, this course is ideal for a Field Instructors who have at least

- at least 5 years of experience supervising MSW students as a field instructor
- taken a field instruction course at a different social work institution and want to learn more about field instruction at CSSW
- are outside the NY/NJ/CT area (Priority is given to participants outside of tri-state area, however there may be availability upon request)

The course is designed with an anti-racist lens that also focuses on power, oppression, and privilege. All topics of the course are taught within an anti-oppressive framework with a decolonizing Social Work perspective. This SIFI course focuses on the following topics:

- Infrastructure of the MSW Program (i.e. major methods of concentration, field of practice options, and program degree pathways)
- Roles of key field education and advising staff
- Education Plan
- Assignments
- Process recordings
- Supervision
- Adult Learning
- End-of-semester evaluations and core competencies
- Termination

CE is provided as a complimentary benefit.
